RFA 12-01: CIRM New Faculty Physician Scientist Translational Research Awards

Updated April 10, 2012. Amended versions of the RFA, CNF and LOI can be accessed below using the indicated links.

The purpose of the CIRM New Faculty Physician Scientist Translational Research Awards is to encourage and facilitate the career development of physician scientists working in translational stem cell research. This award will fund promising new faculty physician scientists in the critical early stages of their careers as independent investigators and faculty members by providing salary and research support for up to five years. This award further encourages the career development of these investigators by including a mentoring requirement. Through this funding mechanism, CIRM expects to help establish a cadre of physician scientist stem cell researchers in California who will help advance innovative translational stem cell science toward clinical development.

Please see the RFA for full details.
